ABSTRACT

The Criminal Code of the Republic of Uzbekistan defines “terrorism” as follows: “Terrorism is the act of complicating international relations, violating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a state, undermining security, provoking war and armed conflict, destabilizing the socio-political situation, intimidating the population. It differs from other types of terrorism and at the same time dangerous in that it uses not one, but at least two or more opposition forces and the capabilities of organized criminal organizations (ideological, military, technical, economic, financial). Today, some groups seeking political power under the guise of religious slogans are influencing the socio-political situation in Central Asia, particularly in Uzbekistan.
