ABSTRACT

Our Constitutional order's primary charge is social fairness. It's a legacy we want to bequeath to future generations while maintaining its purity and strength. Clinical legal education (hereafter "CLE") is one method for promoting social justice. The word "CLE" or "law clinic" typically denotes to a non-profit organization that serves a public interest or a group of people in society who are poor or vulnerable who, for different reasons, lack access to the legal system. A legal clinic, as the name implies, may range from a student initiative done in their free time and outside of the college setting to a natural component of a clinical university curriculum. There are examples of clinics run by practicing attorneys that are more or less independent from law schools yet include law students as part of an externship program. The term "clinic" conjures up images of trainee physicians seeing actual patients in their medical offices. Within the academic setting, these clinics provide legal students practical experience while also providing assistance to a variety of (usually impoverished) clients. Many legal clinics provide unpaid internships in one or more specific areas, allowing customers to get free legal assistance.
