ABSTRACT

The article explores the early middle-age economic development of the Ferghana Valley in the Chinese source based on historical sources and literature. It also covers the development of agriculture, horticulture, livestock and mining in this valley. Information from the Chinese sources on the history of Ferghana was first reported to us through Russian translations by I.B.ichurin, N.V.Kuner, and A.V.Malyavkin [1, 3, 4]. The information contained in their works has served as a guide to discovering the unexplored aspects of the history of Ferghana in a timely manner.
