INTRODUCTION

The complex, rapid changes taking place in the world today are increasing the importance of research to create modern models for solving the problems of young people, especially unorganized youth, to determine their effectiveness. There is a growing need for research on philosophical understanding of the scale of the problems of employment of unorganized youth, increasing their social activity and the development of effective proposals and recommendations for their solution. In this regard, the structure of the State Department of Labor Policy and international development agencies in the United States has played a significant role in solving various problems among young people.

In Uzbekistan, the announcement of 2008 as the "Year of Work" and 2010 as the "Year of harmoniously developed generation" has become social. The General Assembly of the United Nations General Assembly also adopted Resolution 64/134 declaring August 12, 2010 the International Year of Youth: Dialogue and Solidarity. Decree of the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan No. PF-6017 of June 30, 2020 "On measures to radically reform the state youth policy in the Republic of Uzbekistan and bring it to a new level" and PP "On the organization of the Agency for Youth Affairs of the Republic of Uzbekistan" June 30, 2020 Resolution No. 4768 is a clear demonstration of the fact that the social support of these young people is one of the highest priorities not only in our country, but also around the world.

Based on the experience of developed countries in Uzbekistan, it is important to pay attention to youth issues, teach them to think logically, raise the culture of critical thinking, provide practical assistance in solving life problems, especially the introduction of a new innovation system in working with youth. Research is being conducted in the world's leading research centers to ensure the social activity and employment of young people, given the complex demographic situation in the world and the scale of socio-economic problems. In particular, it is important to achieve the effectiveness of cultural, educational, educational work with young people, to increase their confidence in the future, to develop and implement scientific criteria for policy coordination in this area through the study of science-based solutions to existing problems.

The problems of young people and the various destructive moods between them have been scientifically studied, primarily in the fields of sociology, psychology and political science. Extensive research on youth issues in Uzbekistan and the activities of the Youth Agency A.Kholmahmatov, A.Hukumov, G.Tillaeva, G.Tulenova, D.Rakhimova, Z.Kodirova, N.Temirova, O.Muhammadiyeva, R.Kurbanov, S. Mamashokirov, T. Kurbanov, F.Musaev, F.Ravshanov, Sh.Gafurov, E.Bobomurodov and other similar scientists.

In particular, Sh.R.Gafurov distinguishes the following features of the youth category: “.. inability to reconcile facial goals with the interests of the state and society; social activism, low level of political and legal awareness: lack of work or education (except for military service and criminal convicts), lack of training, susceptibility to negative influences, including "popular culture" and foreign ideas, social not having a definite purpose in life, being fourteen years old and not older than thirty” [1].

Young people as the most economically active part of the population are the most promising category, the object of long-term intellectual investment. They are distinguished by a high level of knowledge, enthusiastic labor motivation, strong physical potential, the ability to quickly acquire competitive professions and specialties in the labor market. Therefore. The First President of the Republic of Uzbekistan I.A. In his speech at the meeting on the results of socio-economic development of the country in 2010, Karimov said that "solving the problem of employment and job creation is a special priority and the most important condition for the successful and sustainable development of the country in 2011 and the near future." he said separately. At the same time, the head of state outlined the tasks of secondary special, vocational colleges to solve the problem of employment of graduates.
